

More Results

More Results

The `google-sidebar` macro inserts a panel on a page that displays in-line search results from Google and Google with an `site:ist.mit.edu` restriction using the Google search API. It pulls its query term from the URL, specifically from the `searchQuery` parameter in the URL. Because of this it really only works on Knowledge Base search results pages. It is called from the `sidebar` macro, which pulls in different sets of sidebar panels depending on which page it is on. The `google-sidebar` macro is currently displayed on the Knowledge Base Search Results page. It is called with code like this:

```
{google-sidebar}
```

from the `sidebar` macro. If it is used on page that does not pass any query parameters, it will display an informative message of what it would do if it had search terms.

Screen shots of `google-sidebar`

More Results

From the IS&T web site:

See all IS&T results...

On the Interweb directly from Google
(may contain contaminants):

The Talking Moose

Feb 15, 2006 ... A desktop diversion for the Mac that has a Moose pop up on your screen periodically (several different animations are available), ...

Talking Moose - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The Talking Moose was a humorous talking cartoon utility for the Apple Macintosh , originally created in 1986 by Canadian programmer Dr. Steven Halls.

...

The Talking Moose for PCs

For the Talking Moose XP or Vista versions, they were originally released by Aaron Lambert for download on Softpedia.com and also were available on his ...

Hey Mac, the Moose is Loose

The Talking Moose, an animated cartoon figure that drove people crazy in the 1980s, is making a comeback. By Leander Kahney.

See all Google results...

powered by

More Results

More results related to your Hermes search, pulled from the IS&T web site and the Interweb, will appear below after you run a Hermes search.

powered by

On Search Results page

On another page